PAUL J. LOH

Ask him to tout his victories or tell “war stories” about his many trials, Paul Loh will demurely take a pass. Such is the understated and serious approach that Paul takes to defending individuals and corporations facing government investigations and criminal prosecutions. Paul knows he has done a good job when you do not hear his client’s name in the news. A founder of the premier minority-owned trial firm in the country, Willenken Wilson Loh & Delgado LLP, Paul is a seasoned trial lawyer with a diverse legal background. Upon graduating from Harvard Law School, Paul worked under the mentorship of Barry Tarlow in Beverly Hills, California, the country’s leading RICO criminal defense expert. Paul later joined an Am Law 100 international litigation firm, where he expanded his practice to include complex business litigation and intellectual property, as well as white collar criminal defense. In 2002, Paul helped found the Willenken Firm, which The American Lawyer has described as a “gutsy firm” with an “enviable client list” that includes leading companies such as Procter & Gamble, Microsoft, Starbucks Coffee, Sempra Energy, NBCUniversal, AvisBudget Group, T-Mobile, and Sears Holdings Corporation. Paul has defended individuals and corporations investigated or charged with offenses ranging from securities fraud to homicide, bid-rigging to public corruption, and price-fixing to racketeering. The breadth of Paul’s experience in both criminal and civil litigation, and across multiple industries, enhances his substantive expertise and range as a white collar criminal defense lawyer. Conversant in Mandarin, Paul’s white collar criminal defense clients also include some of the largest technology companies in China and Taiwan, which are the subject of increasing U.S. regulatory and investigative oversight.
